

NEGRO'S CAPTURE ENDS MAN HUNT

Bloodhounds Aid Pursuers to Get
Alleged Assailant of Campbell
County Young Woman.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
LYNCHBURG, Va., September 10.—Oscar Herndon, alias Hearn, alias Berger, the negro who has been hunted for three counties since Monday afternoon, charged with having attacked a young woman of Campbell county, was arrested last night in a tobacco barn in Halifax county, about thirty-five miles distant from the scene of the alleged offense, and after a chase of more than 100 miles through Campbell, Pittsylvania and Halifax counties.

The arrest was made near Wortham's sawmill, J. H. Adams, who was in charge of the bloodhounds and had four farmers with him, made the arrest.

The negro gave no trouble, and at midnight he was turned over to Sheriff J. C. Shelhorse, of Pittsylvania county, who went to Chatham with his charge during the night.

Adams and B. O. Fortescue, the former formerly a member of the local police force, and the latter special officer in Amherst county, who led the man-hunt with the bloodhounds, returned this morning, bringing the bloodhounds with them.

The two men had followed the negro almost without stopping since Tuesday morning and for upwards of 100 miles.

Start of the Chase.
The men in charge of the dogs declared that when they reached the scene of the offense Tuesday morning about 1 o'clock, Adams refused to put the dogs on the trail at that hour, because it would have been impossible for him to have followed them in the darkness and underground through which they had to go. This caused some dissatisfaction among the people who were at the scene, nearly all of whom had different ideas as to what should be done.

After daylight, however, Adams and Fortescue started out, and that morning trailed the negro in the direction of his father's home near Lake Run, Pittsylvania county. The dogs took the track and trailed the negro two miles, and then the rain made them useless.

Wednesday evening the search was kept up as best it could be, and it was learned during the night that the crowd was on the trail of Herndon and success seemed to be certain. Fortescue, who had been shadowing some of the relatives of the fugitive, overheard a conversation between the father and brother of the boy, in which it was told exactly where the boy had gone. It was learned that he had slept in a stable Tuesday night, and that a negro fed him and gave him money. The negro, Step Starr, was arrested.

Sheriff Is Notified.
As soon as the party learned they were on the track of the negro, they advised Sheriff Shelhorse by telephone.

Step Starr told the posse that he would bring Herndon to the searchers Wednesday night, and he was shadowed. The men found he left home on Tuesday, and that he went in the direction of Stray Stone, Pittsylvania county. When the men were convinced that Starr was trying to deceive them, they told him of his deception. Adams next learned that Herndon was seen in the vicinity of Stray Stone, and the searchers hurried in that direction. In a short time they were convinced that the negro could not be far away, and the band of men separated, Adams going with one crowd and Fortescue with the other. Adams and his contingent went in the direction of Wortham's sawmill, and in that neighborhood saw another man who knew the negro and who had seen him pass in the direction of Rocky's mill. Here they took up the trail again with the hounds, but the rain yesterday afternoon stopped this.

dogs did. Soon again they heard that Herndon had asked to sleep in a near-by tobacco barn; thither they went, and Adams put his hand on the negro's shoulder before he knew any one was near.

The negro denied that he was the person wanted. Finally, however, he broke down and admitted he was the one sought, but declared he had not meant to harm Miss Cora Maddox.

The young woman, it is said, on being attacked, caught Herndon's head under her arm and beat him severely before he could free himself, and he was glad to get away.

It is stated the largest crowd of men in pursuit at any time was forty. It is believed there would have been a lynching if Herndon had been caught Monday or Tuesday, but after that the feeling seemed to cool down.
